Statement A—showing outlay (other than from Loans) on Public Works of all kinds, and the net charge on the Revenue of the year, from 1873-74 to 1883-84.

Statement B—showing additions to the liabilities of the State on account of Productive Public Works of all descriptions, from 1873-74 to 1883-84.

OBSERVATIONS.—Statement A exhibits the annual outlay (other than from Loans) under the three main divisions of Famine, Ordinary, and Productive Works.

2. Under the division of Famine, the outlay actually incurred on Famine Relief Works in the years 1873-74 to 1879-80 is entered, because it is indispensable for a fair comparison of those years with the years 1881-82 to 1883-84, in which a portion of surplus revenue has been set aside and expended on works providing a protection against famine. The annual average of outlay on Relief Works during the first eight years of the series was £808,664, and that in the last three £750,000.

3. Under the division of Ordinary, the Imperial, Provincial, and Local transactions are shown separately, because the constitution of the three is essentially different, and their amalgamation would vitiate any comparison of progressive expenditure.

With respect to the Imperial transactions, it will be observed that there

* 1881-82	...	15,237	has been scarcely any increase during the eleven
1882-83	...	105,000	years under review. Such increase as now
1883-84	...	174,700	exists is mainly due to the new charge* for subsidised Railways, of which the Bengal Central

Railway is the principal example.

In the Provincial transactions, a considerable increase will be observed in the last three years of the series. This, however, is mostly not an increase of actual charge, but is merely due to the expenditure by the Provincial Governments of balances which they had accumulated during previous years, in which their outlay will be seen to have been correspondingly low. These accumulations were mainly caused by the orders curtailing all outlay under Provincial and Local, as well as under Imperial heads, during the Afghan war. The average of the eight years 1876-77 to 1883-84 is only £1,684,726, which is less than even the outlay in the first year of the series, 1873-74. In any examination of Provincial transactions it must be distinctly remembered that, under the decentralisation system established during Lord Mayo's Government, the Provincial Governments administer resources assigned to them periodically, and that the Imperial Government has no control over them during the term of the contract. In 1882-83 the periodical revision took place, and new contracts for five years were entered into, the net financial result of which was an improvement in Imperial resources of about £387,000 per annum. It may, however, be noted that the Provincial system imparts considerable extra security to the Imperial finances, by the guarantees it comprises of the interest on Imperial loans for Productive Public Works. The amount of debt thus guaranteed at present is about 19½ millions (conventional) sterling.

Local transactions, that is to say, those of the various Committees and Boards administering funds assigned, or levied by law, for strictly local objects, are entirely beyond Imperial control, and in a very great measure beyond that of the Provincial Governments. Such increase in outlay as is observable may be ascribed partly to the expenditure of accumulated balances, and partly to the normal growth of the assigned funds themselves.

Taking the division of Ordinary as a whole, it may be said with general accuracy that, during the last eleven years, the Imperial expenditure has been stationary, except as augmented by the subsidised Railways, and that the Provincial and Local transactions have not outstepped, and in fact have in some cases fallen within, the normal increment of the revenues upon which they are based. The outlay under the two latter heads will be less in 1884-85 and subsequent years, owing to the depletion of the balances already referred to.

4. The Productive division of the Statement presents two totals, exclusive and inclusive of the Guaranteed Railway Companies. Under every separate column in this division (except Madras Harbour) a material diminution of outlay has occurred of late years. Grouping only the Madras Harbour, Irrigation and State Railways proper, the charge of £303,267 in 1873-74 has been reduced to £144,024 in 1883-84. The addition of the East Indian Railway, acquired by the State in 1879-80, converts this charge of £144,024 into a receipt of £864,700. But if the Guaranteed Railways are also brought in, as is indispensable for fair comparison of the position of the State in respect of Productive Works at successive periods, then the result is even more remarkable, a charge of £1,602,416 in 1873-74 being replaced by a receipt in 1883-84 of £519,200. In other words, the increase in Productive Public Works revenue, after paying all charges for interest, has been £2,121,616 in eleven years.

5. Statement B shows the formal additions to the liabilities of the State during the period under review—a factor which cannot be omitted without creating erroneous impressions regarding the financial results of Public Works administration.

The total amount of new liabilities is stated to be £60,824,538, but this amount includes £6,281,336 which was originally outlay from Ordinary revenues, but was subsequently transferred, for greater accuracy of account, to the head of Productive Public Works. The actual liabilities of the State have consequently increased by only £54,543,202. At the same time, the Productive Public Works account has been debited with increase on the full sum of £60,824,538 in calculating the enhanced revenue of £2,121,616, shown in paragraph 4.

6. Reverting to Statement A, the fourth division shows the net charge on the revenue of the year. Taking the Imperial transactions as a whole, and excluding Famine Works (which are, as shown in paragraph 2, a nearly constant quantity throughout), the net charge in 1883-84 amounts to only £1,637,800, against £3,531,071 in 1873-74. The net charge in the former year is less than that in any year of the series except 1881-82, when the railway traffic in grain and seeds was exceptionally good. By excluding Relief Works and Guaranteed Railways, while including Protective Works and the East Indian Railway, and also ignoring the fact of expenditure of accumulated balances of Provincial and Local Funds in the last three years, a result less favourable may be attained, as shown in column 21 of the Statement, but the unsoundness of this method of calculation will be apparent from the remarks in the preceding paragraphs.

7. To sum up the results of the eleven years' Public Works administration, the net Imperial expenditure, excluding Famine, has been reduced by £1,893,271, and the revenue from Productive Works has been increased by £2,121,616, notwithstanding that £54,543,202 have been added to the "Productive" debt, and that 4,505 miles of new railway have been opened up to this date, while 1,602 miles more are under construction.

As regards Railways, it may be added that, as shown at page 44 of the Preliminary Administration Report of the Director General of Railways for 1882-83, the total capital cost of all lines open to traffic was £143,171,856 on the 31st of December last, and that the net earnings, including interest, were 5·37 on this amount. The State Railways alone earned 3·03 per cent., or 4·12 per cent. if the Punjab Northern, Indus Valley, and Kandahar lines be excluded.

ORDER.—Ordered, that the foregoing observations be communicated to

The Governments of Madras, Bombay, Bengal, the North-Western Provinces and Oudh, and the Punjab, in the Public Works Department.
The Chief Commissioners of the Central Provinces, British Burma, Assam, and Coorg.
